

Recap of 2016 Reunion

Best Reunion Ever! As is typical, we had a few early risers (18) who left the picnic grove at 9 am to follow wherever our sage researcher wanders. He's getting more backwoods every year, it seems. So this year, we promptly followed to the old Delilah Younkin graveyard in Hexie, where Mark Miner provided a delightful history of three Younkin brothers buried there, Eli, Weasel Jake, and Frederick J, the Civil War veteran.

He told of Fred's sufferings during and after the war. He also gave some Firestone history, as they are "connected" to us, and also buried there. We stopped at Old Bethel, where MOST of the inhabitants are descended from Younkins, and most are related to the descendants of the Jacob-Jacob line. Next on the stop was the John Younkin homestead, later owned by Ephraim Miner, and where Mark first met his real obsession with family stories. Last on the stop was Bethel Methodist Cemetery, near Paddytown, where few on the tour had ever been. Ryan Sechler and family had the cemetery somewhat cleaner than usual, and Ryan brought out an old photo of the church that once stood in front of the cemetery.

Johann Heinrich Junghen Scholarship

The winner in 2016 – Travis Olwin, of Prince George, VA, who will begin studies at Liberty University in the fall of 2016. He is the s/o Nick Olwin, s/o Vickie Sanner Hester, d/o Everett Sanner, s/o Zelda Younkin, d/o John F, s/o Wm Henry, s/o Frederick F, s/o Frederick G, s/o Johann Heinrich Junghen. Well, at least that's ONE of his lines. He also descends from the Jacob line through his maternal Grandmother, Fay Younkin Sanner. Unfortunately, Travis was unable to attend the reunion to pick up his $450. Scholarship check in person, as he was required to finish some testing for his pilot's license.

The scholarship money was generously subsidized this year by a generous contribution by Evelyn Younkin Silver, and by the donation of 50/50 money won by Blair Younkin, Jr. Thank you both! It is good to invest in our youth! Congratulations, Travis!

OLD LAND TRANSACTIONS

By Mark A Miner

"Chew and Wilcocks" are familiar names to many researchers of early southwestern Pennsylvania land ownership records, and for good reason. Together, Benjamin Chew Sr. and Alexander Wilcocks owned 43 tracts totaling nearly 12,000 acres in Somerset and Fayette Counties in the late 1700s.

In 1837, the Wilcocks' heirs sold one of their tracts to local farmer Jacob Miner Jr. and his eldest son John Miner.

As residents of Philadelphia, Chew and Wilcocks were absentee owners, and in fact may never have actually laid eyes on the lands they owned. Chew (1722-1810) was active and influential in state politics and, in addition to serving as Chief Justice of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, was the attorney for the Penn family. A silhouette portrait of Chew, at age 70, is seen here. Wilcocks (1741-1801) was Chew's son-in-law, law partner, judge and recorder of deeds in Philadelphia.

Chew and Wilcocks jointly obtained their lands from the Penns through patents during the American Revolution, when the Penns' ownership rights, granted by British royal charter, became null and void. Patents are legal instruments by which states grant public lands to individuals.

Colonial surveyors with rod and chain

The partners received a detailed description of each tract in a document compiled by Henry Rhodes dated March 21, 1777.

Chew and Wilcocks held their Somerset/Fayette tracts for about 14 years, until November 1790, when they divided their holdings. Chew received 5,947 acres and Wilcocks secured 6,011 acres. Wilcocks died 11 years later, in 1801, and his land was inherited by his children: Benjamin Chew Wilcocks, Elizabeth Wilcocks, Samuel Wilcocks, Ann Wilcocks (wife of attorney Joseph Reed Ingersoll) and Mary Wilcocks (wife of lawyer Charles Jared Ingersoll). These parcels remained in the possession of the Wilcocks heirs for several decades.

Many of the tracts had fancy names, such as Death of the Fawn, White's Little Mill Seat, and Hunting Lot, and were often rented to farmers for cultivation. Hunting Lot contained 318 acres and was located in what is now locally called Hexebarger in Upper Turkeyfoot Township, near the Old Bethel Church. Chew admired Hunting Lot and once wrote about its

The "excellent upland meadow" to the right of this road, known as Hunting Lot and sold by Chew and Wilcocks

"excellent upland-meadow." This is the tract that was sold to the Minerds.

Tax records suggest that Minerd may have rented Hunting Lot as early as 1829. The acquisition enlarged his farm to 500 acres, and it played an important role in the Minerd family's growth and development. Four generations lived there between 1837 and 1867, when it was sold out of the family. Minerd and his wife Catherine Younkin raised nine children there, and four sons -- John Minerd, Henry Minerd, Jacob Minerd III and Charles Minerd -- bought portions after their father's death. In 1851, at the heyday of the Minerds' habitation of the farm, about 35 family members lived in various dwellings within its borders.

How Minerd, an unlettered farmer, came into contact with the faraway Wilcocks heirs is not known, though probably was done through an intermediary. As absentee owners, Chew and Wilcocks utilized agents to handle day-to-day administration of the properties. One of Chew's agents was Abraham Morrison, a Somerset attorney called "the patriarch of the Somerset County bar." Morrison lived across the street from the courthouse and in his career served as the first county commissioners' clerk, county treasurer, prothonotary and clerk of courts, register of wills, and register of deeds.

Morrison kept in touch with Chew by writing letters containing details of developments and asking opinions of certain matters. Several of these letters survive in the collection of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, in Philadelphia. The author reviewed these letters in 1987 while in Philadelphia researching Minerd property records.

One letter was penned from Somerset on Feb. 13, 1808, and contains nuggets of information of interest to genealogists, historical researchers, and archeologists. In it, Morrison summarized leases with Jacob Streight, Peter Kendle, Mr. Shunk, Frederick Zufalt, Jacob Neffe, George Arnold, Joseph Mattick, John Lighty, and Daniel Miller. Morrison also mentioned the names Shaphat Dwire, William Tissue, Mr. Ringer, Mr. Wood, Mr. Biggs and Adam Faidley.

The letters describe specific terms and conditions of the leases, which required labor from the renters in return for low rates. For instance, Jacob Neffe rented a tract called "Turkey Bottom" for a three-year term, for the annual sum of one penny. In return, Neffe agreed to build a barn and stable measuring 20 by 24 feet, plant 30 apple trees, make all the outside fences "good and sufficient," and pay all taxes.

Morrison may have been frustrated in trying to stay fully abreast of the status of all the properties. He once wrote to Chew: "As I have not had full power to sell your land. I have not informed myself of the value of the respective tracts, nor indeed is it easy to get such information without a personal examination of them."

The 1830s, during when the Minerds made their purchasing decision, were an era of change and uncertainty. As President Andrew Jackson toppled the national banking empire, the economy became increasingly "speculative and unsound," wrote historian Arthur Schlesinger wrote. "Crop failures in 1835 toppled the first domino. Farmers could not pay merchants and speculators, who in turn could not pay banks."

C.J. Ingersoll

By 1837, according to Digby Baltzell's book, Philadelphia Gentlemen, a financial panic ensued when Americans embarked on "an era of 'wild cat' spending. One of the sellers of the Minerd farm, Charles Jared Ingersoll (seen here), was a prominent former U.S. congressman and district attorney in Philadelphia. He was running for office during an economic depression, and needed cash, and may have sold the land to help raise badly needed funds. What were the Wilcocks heirs like as people? Charles Jared Ingersoll's son in law, Sidney George Fisher Sr., wrote an extensive and insightful diary that was published by the Historical Society of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia in 1967, under the title, A Philadelphia Perspective. His narrative included the following:

Of Charles Jared Ingersoll (1782-1862) -- U.S.

Congressman: His "conversational powers, & his gentlemanlike manners make him exceedingly agreeable.... He was in many respects a remarkable person and during a long life held a conspicuous position as a public man, having been twice in Congress and for many years district attorney in this city when the place was far more respectable than it has since become.... His intellect was not of a high order, but he wrote & spoke with east, animation, and earnestness & was witty at times, generally sarcastic, clever, pointed, odd, never eloquent or profound."

Of Benjamin Chew Wilcocks (1776-1845) -- U.S. Consul at Canton, China: "For some weeks before I left town he had sunk into a state of profound depression, similar to that with which he was once before affected, which lasted for 12 years during which he never left his house and from which he was roused some 3 or 4 years ago. When he was roused, he compensated by extraordinary activity for his long seclusion and apathy."

Of Joseph Reed

Ingersoll (1786-1868) -- U.S. Congressman; U.S. Minister to Great Britain (1852-1853): "His mind was decidedly commonplace, his range of knowledge narrow, he possessed however that sort of ability which produces success, fluency of speech, agreeable manners, great power of labor, & determined will. He had a large practice at the bar, but he was a jury-lawyer; he had a respectable position in Congress, because he worked well on Committees & was known to be upright & honorable, but he was not distinguished & never made a speech that excited public attention."

A Philadelphia Perspective by Sidney George Fisher

These documents show that Chew and Wilcocks played important roles in developing the largely uncultivated lands of Somerset and Fayette Counties. With the help of on-the-scene agents, these influential Philadelphians touched the lives of any common farming families.

Eddie Joe Hutter—Much of Eddie Joe Hutter's life revolved around a quarter-mile of Route 130 in Unity, where he went from home to his auto repair shop and the Pleasant Unity Volunteer Fire Department next door. The mechanic who pressured his daughters to mind their own cars' maintenance and inspections would sputter around the neighborhood in a beater. "He always had the worst cars, because he was only going a little way up and down the road," said Mr. Hutter's daughter, Lisa Phillips, 49, of Latrobe. A lifelong mechanic and volunteer firefighter, Edward J. "Red Ball" Hutter died Wednesday, Dec. 14, 2016, at Excelsa Health Latrobe Hospital of complications from an infection. He was 73. Mr. Hutter, the eldest of four children, grew up around the E.J. Hutter Garage, owned and operated by his father and grandfather. "He's been in that garage since he was born; he's never worked for anyone else," Ms. Phillips said. "There are stories of him moving cars around for my grandpa when he was 11 years old." He met Janet Shine on a New Year's Eve, when both were members of a wedding party — Mr. Hutter's best friend was marrying Ms. Shine's best friend. They courted slowly at first and began dating in earnest after Mr. Hutter's father died in 1964. They celebrated their 50th anniversary this year. The Hutter family lived with a police scanner chattering away in the house at all times so Mr. Hutter could be the first to respond to crashes with his tow truck or fires with the Pleasant Unity fire department, which he joined at 21 and served as trustee, captain and president over more than 50 years. Until he helped raise money to build a new station in 1985, the fire department was next door to the garage, and Mr. Hutter would answer calls while he worked. "Many days he left the doors open on the garage and cars up on the rack when there was a fire call," said Pleasant Unity fire Chief John Bacha. "If you were having gas pumped or work done and that siren went off, you had to wait." He stopped responding to fires about 15 years ago but remained active with the department through fundraising, repairing the fire trucks and calling bingo games, Mr. Bacha said. Though Mr. Hutter worked long hours, his daughters always were welcome to visit him at the garage down the road, where they watched him work on cars or played among the tires, Ms. Phillips said. When his four grandchildren were born, he was so happy to have children around again, she said. In addition to his wife, Janet, he is survived by two daughters, Lisa Phillips and husband, Randy, of Latrobe, and Amy Liberoni and husband, John, of Norvelt; and four grandchildren. Funeral services will be held at 11 a.m. Saturday at the

Leo M. Bacha Funeral Home in Pleasant Unity. Published in the Greensburg (PA) Tribune-Review. Edward Joe Hutter >>> Betty (Miner) Hutter - Ralph Charles Miner >>> Charles Marion Miner >>> Eli Miner >>> Catherine Younkun.

Mr. and Mrs. DeBlasio moved to Cecil Township in 1941 and resided at the same home until her death, where she raised her family and was surrounded by them as she departed. She was born July 15, 1924, in Washington, a daughter of the late Harley and Virginia Rockwell Hartzell. Dementia took her mind, but left her grace, compassion, gentleness and ability to see beauty intact. Her favorite word was "lovely" and that, she was. She had an immense force known as "kindness." Her friends nicknamed her "The Queen." The people that created Heaven on Earth for her were her family, whom adored her; her caretakers from Caring Mission, Jessie and Marta; Concordia Hospice of Washington; McMurray Meals on Wheels; and her grandchildren, great-grandchildren and great-great-grandchildren, from whom she felt immense love. She loved unconditionally, rested in God, and put her and her family's lives in his hands.
